THURSDAY APRIL 26, 1922

In the Saturday Evening Post of April 8th, there is a story headed "Traveler's Repose." It is by a writer whose works are well known to us, so well that we have to be hard up for something to read, to follow him at all, though we usually read the Saturday Evening Post religiously, from kiver to kiver. This writer's name is Joseph Hergeshimer, and he always has some kind of a lesson to inculcate, and that does not suit us, who turn to fiction for succor from sorrow, and not for instruction. We are thinking about quitting the pursuit of fiction all together for a curious reason. So many of the tale tellers are young and have a cruel way of classing people of our age as old. We hold with the old lady of this county who is ninety-eight and who has no patience with her daughter who is eighty when she complains of age.

So while the name "Traveler's Repose," had a familiar sound as that of the famous old tavern in the Upper Tract, we paid no attention to it for some time until we chanced to see that it referred to that identical place now called by the name of Bartow. Then with a sigh of duty we set down to see what the scandal was all about. Knowing the country pretty well, we soon saw that the story was laid on both sides of the Main Alleghany, in Highland and Pocahontas Counties. Mr. Higsrammer calls the county Greenstream and the nearest city Stenton and so forth. It seems that Mr. Hillsbarker spent some months along the Staunton and Parkersburg turnpike and that the famous motion picture play, "To Be David," is the result of his visit and that it was filmed in these, our mountains. And it is with the feeling of keen regret that we recently passed this play in the big city and did not go in to see it. We felt an urge too, and that was the subconscious knowledge that the play was about our own country, but it is only a matter of time when the play will be given here, for these are the days when Birnam wood comes to Dunsinane.

Mr. Hellepper is pleased to observe that in Greenstream county that girls and women were ornamental only when they were very young, not more than fifteen or sixteen, and then only in the hours between their duties in the house and dairy. They married at once, after a few dances, a short courtship, and retired definitely to an existence of utility.

That shows that the famous author is either a chicken fancier, or that he is going blind, and should see either a preacher or a doctor. But then it is to be remembered that when publishers pay twenty-five cents a word for copy, that they are responsible for a lot of twaddle.

The study that the author has made of our country is dealt out by imagining a young man of moonshine blood going to the great war and coming back so far reformed as to abolish the still in his parlor. He is furthermore so impressed with the sin and misery of the world, and so imbued with the peace and contentment of the woods and hills, that he conceives a plan of going about as a kind of a preacher trying to convince the people that they are greatly favored by their isolation, and that the thing to do is to let the world go by. Keep out all the vain things of the earth. Be sufficient unto ourselves. Form a community that would be known all over the world for rightness. Get back to the good old days. Make an impregnable fortress of contentment. He was misunderstood. The storekeeper thought that he meant to keep out all other goods. Some wicked young men thought he ought to set up the still again. His sweetheart turned sour, and so forth. He was not getting along very well with it. His plans seemed to lack details, but the people heard him, and paid about as much attention to him as they would to any other teacher.

And just as he had got to be known as a worker who went about giving unsought advice, a moving picture outfit came in to shoot a film, and to scatter the fame of the county far and wide, and in a dispute with this worldly invasion, our hero got into a fight with the director of the picture people, and the director got shot so badly that he died out. Unhappily that killing exemplifies the life here. Few fights, but when a fight does come, it is apt to be fatal. So he has a hard time to get the hero out of the Happy Valley of Amhara, but the sweetheart having got over her pointing spell comes back and shows him the way down a kind of Still House Run, and so far as the record discloses, the young man is still at large, though married. Reminds one of Ope Reed's "Wives of the Prophet."

We do not wish to appear harsh, and we are not willing to accept the plan of wearing homespun and doing without imports, but after reading what Mr. Hopsotch hath written, we have decided to do our own writing, and not trouble him for another helping. It is a regretful thing that we have to contend with so many killings cannot get away from the fatal consequences. Men fight to the finish. And the particular brand of moonshine that is handed out, nowadays seems to invoke the spirit of murder. Last week we reviewed the case of Roy Houchin and the killing that followed a pleasant evening marred by the use of liquor and the killing at the end. And this week, two days of the court was taken up in the trial of Henley Alberts for killing his brother-in-law, Elza Hinkle, at the end of another such family party with visitors, after an evening of feasting, music, dancing and drinking. The defendant was a rather irregular, sandy haired young man of twenty-eight, who wore spectacles, and looked about as harmless as any man in the room. But he had the thick neck, blood in the face, devoid of imagination lock, so often observed in murderers. We have known a good many, and we have yet to see one who showed that he had any grasp on future events, or any power to project his mind forward. Murderers do not realize that they are going to be hung until they feel the halter draw.

Alberts was found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprisonment. It was impossible to tell whether he was glad or sorry. He did not seem to be intrigued. The verdict was right in our opinion, but we consider that it was the force of circumstances that got the prisoner into this trouble. There is a famous series of cartoons known as Mutt and Jeff, in which Jeff is ill treated with great regularity. He has died a thousand deaths at the hands of Mutt. And it was apparent that this man Alberts had been the underdog for years with a dangerous, overbearing brother-in-law. But when Alberts did the killing, he was so inept about it, that he did about everything that could have been done on the spur of the moment to pull off a killing that would make a hanging matter out of it.

Three woodsmen came to the house of Hinkle and Alberts, where they lived together, after supper one Sunday night in January, and they brought there a half gallon of death and damnation, doubly distilled and dangerous. The occasion of their stopping was that they had walked all the way from Cranberry woods and wanted some supper. The booze was passed around and Alberts took two drinks at least. Now liquor which makes life take on a rosy, hopeful tinge, as a usual thing, may with the innate perversity of inanimates, have just the opposite effect. This time it made Alberts mind dwell on murder. It does look like murder pervades the air sometimes.

Hinkle, whose time had come, addressed a remark in friendliness to Alberts, and Alberts replied, "Yes, but—" It was no time for buts. What Alberts then said was apropos of nothing. "But you said you would kill me once." What an answer was that! His mind must have been charged with murder, for Hinkle knifed to his feet and showed a knife. He also seemed to have taken the precaution to put a saw sledge, (hand anvil) in his pocket. But the fuss was over in a fleeting moment. Alberts got a rifle and fired it while struggling with one of the woodsmen. And the woodsman got the rifle, emptied the magazine and hid it, and all thought the trouble was over again. Then Alberts came into the room where Hinkle was. Alberts was walking with his body tense and a knife held high, and in a twinkling of an eye had given one downward slash, and almost cut Hinkle's shoulder off. Hinkle then ran. The surgeon says that when a man is bleeding to death that he will run as far as he can and fall. Hinkle traveled for about two hundred steps. His journey was marked by a blood trail. It led him to the county road and he died in the road.

Alberts exulted. He challenged the world to conflict. The woodsmen ran. Alberts took the trail left by his victim and found him dead and returned to the house and told his mother and Hinkle's wife that Elza lay dead in the road. When the man was found, the head was nearly severed from the body. Alberts denies that he is guilty of this atrocity, though no one else could have done it. Alberts went to the house of George Ramsey and in a wild incoherent manner came in on them at midnight carrying an open knife covered with blood, and told them that he had killed Hinkle. These are some of the salient facts developed at the trial. Alberts was guilty not only of hard words but the blow, and to add to his offense the wild, insensate attack on the dead body of his victim added to the natural repugnance with which society viewed him. He was no student of murder as a fine art as portrayed by DeQuincy and other writers. He went wild with all the ferocity of a beast, and when he came into court it had passed from him and he sat there blinking through his spectacles listening to the case, and not taking a very intelligent interest in it either, so far as anyone could determine by his indifferent attitude. He went on the stand and testified that he was fighting for his life and that he defended himself with an open knife against a fighter who also had an open knife. But there were so many direct witnesses to disprove his story. He denied going to the neighbor's house, so far as his recollection served, and also denied having mutilated the dead body. It is possible that the liquor that he had drunk had brought on a period of forgetfulness. It is a well known fact that a drunken man may engage in many activities of which he remembers nothing when he is sober. But the witness claimed to remember the minutest details of the killing. It would have been better for him if he could have pleaded temporary insanity through the effect of liquor, for that generally reduces the offense to murder in the second degree, dating from the Bible, which declares that wounds without cause come from the use of wine, and if light wines and beer are responsible, there is hardly any length too great to go under the devils aroused in a man's soul after a dose of moonshine liquor.

And during this session at the typewriter we try to connect up the discussion of mountain character by a city writer, in which he intimates that the mountain women are not attractive, and the men dangerous; write up of moonshine and murder cases at a big court; and a famous lecture from the Iocenum bureau at the high school about the feuds and killings of Breathitt county and other counties in eastern Kentucky, which invites us to give thanks that we, his polite audience, are not as these other men are. So we have to play all these cards including the speeches made by able lawyers about the killer, in which prosecuting attorney paints him a fiend in human form, and the attorneys for the defense as an unfortunate man caught in the fell clutch of circumstances. No wonder the Psalmist hastened to say with conviction, that all men are liars. For out of the same mouth can come blessings and cursings about the same identical thing.

And while we know we have the best people in the world, the poor sinful world, yet we have to admit that we have murder trials, sandwiched between moonshine cases. And when the stage was set the other day and the expectant audience had gathered to hear the dramatic story of a horrible killing, a whisper went through the throng like wind through ripened grain, that a few minutes before there had been a killing by shooting at Cass, and that the killer had been caught, and that in due course there would be another attraction in the way of a murder trial at the court house. O why should the spirit of malign be proud!

We were interested in the curious persistence of Charles Vandevender, in the so called art of bootlegging. He seems to be devoted to the profession. He is a big broad shouldered six footer who looks like he could do as much work as any man. He lives at Thornwood the next town above Traveler's Repose, and while he did not have a still in his parlor he did have five gallons of white or colorless moonshine whiskey there that carried a bouquet that reached beyond the fourth row of seats. Vandevender is well known at the county seat having recently served some time in the county prison, and being a docile member of that institution, he was let go before his time.

Suspicion attached to him again, and a search warrant was issued for his castle, and the officers went there to inquire. Vandevender was not at home to his visitors, and Sheriff Beard, who is about the most efficient and most polite of all Virginia gentlemen, regretted to disturb the family, and told them that he would conduct the search with the least possible annoyance to his neighbor. And in the front room almost the first thing that he saw was five half gallon jars of moonshine. It looked like he had been expected and that the fatal stuff was set out where he could not help but see it. The prosecuting attorney referred to it as being set on the table in charge of the stenographer as an exhibit, that it was enough poison to kill every body in the room.

While the sheriff was packing up to leave the premises, two other jars were practically forced on him, in that they were carried from the house to the woodshed in the pockets of a hunting coat.

The defense was that a man named Welscher had passed that way a few minutes before the arrival of the sheriff, and had asked permission to leave the liquor and the coat there, and that they had been taken in as a matter of accommodation without knowing that there was anything in the packages in the nature of a contraband. And a lot of witnesses swore to it. But that defense proved to have a weakness, in that the man Welscher came hotfoot to purge himself of the imputation of guilt, and brought a host of witnesses to prove that he was nine miles away that morning that he had got the word in a day or two that the guilt was to be laid on him, and he and his witnesses had used the fact indelibly in their minds and he proved an alibi, thereby greatly strengthening the State's case.

The proceeding was under the habitual criminal part of the act by which a second offense is punishable by a penitentiary sentence, and when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty the court gave him the high limit, three years in the State's prison. The defendant is not a man to show emotion, but we noticed a whole lot of lines wrinkled his forehead in a peculiar way when he was sentenced. He was silent. His color did not change. His features were immovable. But that knotted forehead showed emotion of some sort.

There was another case of the State vs John Reda. The defendant was an Italian merchant at Cass and the State intimated that he sold lemon and vanilla extract not wisely but too well. The prosecuting attorney stated that he did not claim that essential cooking flavors were unlawful, but that when they were sold as a beverage and drunk at the counter and that it was within the statute against selling intoxicants. A witness testified that customer bought a bottle of the flavor and poured it in a glass with some near beer and drank it. That is like the drink that they used to call "hot-box," in the dear old bar room days, whiskey and beer mixed. One witness gave a new example of the use of a well known word. In answer to a question on cross examination, his answer was, "Not to my acknowledgement." The mature consideration of the jury resulted in a verdict of guilty, and while some may have considered it a close case, they must have considered that the evidence had a guilty flavor.

Commissioner's Sale

E. J. Kiser, Plaintiff,
Vs.
F. A. Degler etc., Defendants.

By virtue of the authority vested in me by a decree of the Circuit Court of Randolph County entered on March 9, 1922, in the above entitled cause, I will proceed on May 10, 1922, at one o'clock P. M., in front of the premises, in the Town of Durbin, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, to make sale, at public auction, of the property in said cause directed to be sold, and which property consists of lot No. 8, and one half of lot No. 7 in block No. 8, in said Town of Durbin, and is the same property now occupied by the defendant, F. A. Degler as a hotel, and in making said sale of said hotel property there will be sold the furniture and fixtures therein which were conveyed to said F. A. Degler by the deed of E. J. Kiser, and wife, bearing date May 14, 1918; and which deed is duly of record in the County Court Clerk's office of said Pocahontas County, and reference is now here specially made thereto for a further description of said property.

TERMS OF SALE: For sufficient cash in hand on the day of sale to pay the plaintiff's debt, interest and costs of suit and proper expenses of sale, (being about $450.00), and for the residue upon a credit of 6, 12 and 18 months, taking from the purchaser interest bearing notes, with good security, for the deferred installments of purchase money, or at the option of the purchaser, he may pay a greater amount in cash.

The above property is said to have a good hotel custom and is said to be well furnished and well supplied with fixtures, and any one desiring such a property should examine the above.

W. B. Maxwell,
Special Commissioner.
I, G. N. Wilson, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Randolph County, West Virginia, do certify that the above named special commissioner has executed bond and security as required by law and by the decree entered in said cause.
Teste:
G. N. Wilson, Clerk.

E. F. Thompson and T. A. Jones of the Upland community, near Hinton, recently found a specimen of mineral ore near Upland church, which they sent to the chemical laboratory of the U. S. Geological survey at Morgantown. A letter to Mr. Thompson from the acting director pronounce it to be galena, the common ore of lead, and values it at from $50.00 to 60.00 a ton. Messrs Thompson and Jones will explore and develop the section in which their find is made providing the ore is found to be in paying quantities.—Hinton Herald.

Your Farm

Does it pay you a fair interest? Are keep, taxes and a decent wage? Up you still trying with your hands to put the western farmers' modern machinery out of business and are you satisfied? If so don't read this, hand it to your neighbor. But don't forget we trade farms for city property and city property for farms. In fact, we trade for anything of real value anywhere in West Virginia, but of all our large holdings we like Morgantown the best, because its Real Estate is growing the fastest of any in the state and it has the most dependable labor market. Write us and let's get acquainted.
